Open your class with this tomorrow:

Rather than opening your class with something in regards to this book, I would suggest trying it out on a single student first. Or, if you are like me, try it out on a family member first as practice. With the student, this could be an effective way in communicating to a student the importance of reading the text, taking notes in class, practicing distributed study techniques rather than cramming, completing homework, participating in class, etc.
